PREFACE.

THE manner in which the intentions of deceased persons, expressed in their last wills, are carried out, or rather in which these intentions are legalized, is sui generis in the State of New York, which as a Colony was first governed under Roman-Dutch law, and it seems appropriate that a volume which gives abstracts of wills, made in Colonial days, as well as after the organization of the State, should have a history of the legal proceedings to which last wills were and are subjected as

INTRODUCTION.

According to "The Roman Law of Testaments, Codicils," etc., by Moses A. Dropsie, the form, "last will and testament," almost universally used, and the term "will" for "testament," are incorrect, because the Roman Law, from which testamentary disposition of property was embodied into the common law, only knew the term testamentum, and never employed the words ultima voluntas or voluntas.

It is not intended to take issue on this question here, but simply to tell what was done at different phases of the history of New York, to give legal force to the last wishes of a deceased person concerning his or her property.

New York having first been settled by the Dutch, the Roman-Dutch law regulated the making of testamentary disposition of property. It allowed such dispositions to be made in two ways, i. e., orally or in writing. A party made a last will orally, or by word of mouth ("which kind of last will is mostly in use among us," says van Leeuwen in his Roman-Dutch Law), by telling two members of the local Court, respectively an Alderman and the Secretary, or a notary before two witnesses, how the property, owned by the testator, was to be divided among the heirs; the notary reduced these intentions to writing, put the notes into proper shape, and having read the same over to the testator and witnesses, asked the former, in the presence of the latter, whether he or she understood the nature of the document and whether what was taken down was the testator's wish and last will. In confirmation of it the testator, the witnesses, and the notary then subscribed the writing, of which the notary made a record in his official minutes, so that, if required, he could give a copy of it. Wills were made in this way for many years after the Colony was governed by English laws, as No. 1 (A 1) shows, which at the same time was proved according to the Duke's Laws.

A will in writing, also called a close will, was one whereby the testator had expressed his intentions in writing, and, having subscribed and sealed it, had handed the same so closed to a notary in the presence of two witnesses, declaring at the same time that the writing contained his or her testament. The document was then endorsed by the notary as "The testament of N. N.," an official minute of the transaction was made, and the testator and witnesses subscribed it. This latter way of making a last will seems to have been the custom during the Dutch period of the Colony of New York, for in no other way can we account for the small number of wills, antedating the year 1664, found in the official records of the Courts and of the various notaries of Dutch times.

Both kinds of testaments, oral as well as close, being invariably made before judicial officers, did not require proof and probate, which came in with the English occupation in 1664.

The English conquerors brought with them

the Code of Laws, called the "Duke's Laws," which say, under the article Administration: "Vpon the Death of Any P^r^son the Constable with two Overseers of the Parish shall repare to the House of the Deceased Party to Enquire after the manner of his Death and of his Will and Testament. . . . That noe Administracon be granted until the Second Sessions after the Party's Decease, (except) to the Widdow or Child, Brother or Sister, to whom it may be imediately granted. The said Widdow, Child, Brother or Sister bringing sufficient Security for the p^r^forming of all things the Law requires. . . . If any Executors nominated in the Will and knoweing there of shall not prove the same at the Next Court of Sessions which shall bee about thirty Days after the Decease of the P^r^ty or shall not cause the same to be Recorded by the recorder or Clerke of that Court . . . Every such P^r^son . . . shall be liable to be sued. . . . That the Clerke of the Sessions, when he Carryes the Probates or Commissions of Admicon to be Signed Doe then also certifie into the Recorder's Office att New Yorke the name of the Testator or the Party Deceased. . . . Wills to be proved and Admicon granted in Sessions if the Estate be vnder the Value of one hundered pounds shall pay one shilling, if hundered pounds five shillings, and soe Propotionable five shillings for Each hundered pounds towards the Defraying of Court Charges."

This law distinctly says, a will was to be proved in the Court of Sessions, but the minutes of the Court of Assizes, then not only the highest Court of the Colony, but also vested with legislative authority, tell, under November 2, 1667: "This day the will of William Ludlam was proved in court;" on November 4, 1667, the same Court granted letters of administration on the estate of Samuel Andrews, lying in Oysterbay and Horseneck, L. I., to John Richbell, of Momoronock, "on behalf of Johanna, the widow of Nicholas Davison, and Richard Russell, of Charles Towne, Mass." We further read in the minutes of this Court for its session of October 7, 1668: "Capt. Thomas Exton's will was proved and y^e^ Exect^rs^ allowed of," "Charles Morgan, his will was proved and the Executrix allowed of," "William How, his will was formerly proved in the Mayors Court, the Executors allowed of," "Letters of Administration granted to Mary, the widow and Relict of Robert Seely."

It seems evident, that at that time no distinction was made between the terms of proving and probating * a testament, although the latter was exercised, as the above quoted reference to the will of William How shows, by the highest Court, which then performed the duties of the later established Prerogative Court. This Prerogative Court had its beginning, as far as the Province of New York was concerned, in the following section of the Instructions given to Governour Dongan, May 29, 1686: "§ 35. And to the End the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction † of the said Archbishop of Canterbury may take place in that Our Province as farr as conveniently may bee We doe think fitt that you give all Countenance and encouragement in y^e^ exercise of the same; excepting only the Collating of Benefices, granting licenses for Marriage and Probat of Wills, which we have reserved to you Our Governour & to y^e^ Commander-in-chief for the time being." The same instructions were given to the succeeding Governours, but it is evident from a letter, written by Governour

* According to Abbott's Law Dictionary, to probate meant the approval of the sufficiency of the will by the proper Court, i.e., in English times the Prerogative Court, while to prove a will was to establish by evidence or submit a will with testimony of witnesses as to execution to a Court of proper jurisdiction.

† In England, prior to 1857, probate jurisdiction was in the ecclesiastical court of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and hence the Bishop's Mitre in the seal.

Lord Bellomont to the Lords of Trade and Plantations, May 15, 1699, that the fees from this source of revenue were not large, for he says: "In thirteen months that I have been here, I have got but £83. 6/ N. Y. money ($208,\frac{25}{00}$) from the Secretary for passes for Ships, Licenses for Marriages and Probats of Wills and all other things, wherein the Seal of the Province was used."

In the meantime, the first General Assembly of the Province had on the 11th of November, 1692, passed a law regulating the proving of wills, that is the verification by the witnesses of the testator's signature and their own. This law directed that wills relating to estates in Orange, Richmond, Westchester, and Kings Counties be proved in New York. In the other Counties the Court of the Common Pleas, or if the Court was not in session, the Judge of the Court, assisted by two Justices of the Peace, was to examine the witnesses and certify the examinations to the Secretary's office, whereupon the Governour, sitting as Judge of the Prerogative Court, granted his Probat. The Common Pleas, consisting of the Judge and Justices of the Peace, were, however, authorized to grant the probat where estates were less than £50. This law was amended November 24, 1750, in so far that the Judges, Justices, and Clerk of Common Pleas for Orange Co. were also empowered "to take the probate of wills and grant letters of administration." The Prerogative Court had also been established, as an "Account of all Establishments of Jurisdictions in New York Province" * tells us: "The Governour discharges the place of Ordinary in granting administracons and proveing Wills and the Secretary is Register. The Governour is about to appoint Delegates in the remoter parts of the government with Supervisors looking after intestates estates and provideing for Orphans."

The Governours went further than appointing. "Delegates for the remoter parts of the government," they appointed the Secretary and his Deputy, Surrogates, or Deputy Judges of the Prerogative Court. The result is described as follows in a letter from Governour, Sir Henry Moore, to the Lords of Trade, June 12, 1766: "The Secretary of this Province and his Deputy have been frequently appointed by the Governour's Surrogates, so that the whole business of the office has been in their hands. Upon this they have taken upon themselves an Authority wh^ch they are not vested with without being appointed Surrogates and have granted probates upon Wills sent up out of the Country, which were proved there, without consulting the Governour or making him acquainted with any such transactions, by which means they would wrest from him the power expressly given by his Majy in his Instructions." Sir Henry appointed Philipp Livingston, Junior, as principal Surrogate and Register of the Prerogative Court, but thereby also involved himself in a quarrel with the Secretary of the Province, which continued for several years after his death in September, 1769, and was not settled until the last Royal Governour, Tryon, could report in 1774, "The Prerogative Court concerns itself only in the Probate of Wills, in matters relating to the administration of Intestates' Estates and granting Marriage Licenses. The Governour is properly the Judge of this Court, but usually acts by Deligate." This procedure continued in the parts of the Province, held by the English, until 1783, while the new Constitution of the State of New York, adopted in 1777, recognized a Judge of the Court of Probates, and the law, passed March 16, 1778,* directed: "The Judge of the Court of Probates of this State shall be vested with all and singular the powers and authorities and have the like jurisdiction in testamentary matters, which, while the State, as the Colony of New York, was subject to the Crown of Great Britain, the Governour or the Commander-in-Chief of the Colony for the time being had and exercised as Judge of the Prerogative Court: Except as to the nomination and appointment of Surrogates in the several Counties, who shall be nominated and appointed by the Council of appointment and commissioned under the Great Seal: And that all letters of administration to be granted by the said Judge . . . shall be tested in the name of the Judge of the said Court."

"From this date," says Judge Charles P. Daly,* "to 1789 this new tribunal, the Court of Probates, continued to exercise the same jurisdiction as the Prerogative Court formerly had done. The proofs of wills, where the deceased had effects in more than one County, were taken before the Judge of this Court, and before the Surrogate, where the effects were exclusively in one County; and in both cases the proof of the will was 'approved and allowed' in the name of the people before the Court of Probates, where it was recorded."

The law of February 20, 1787, "for settling intestate estates, proving wills, etc.," had in the meantime curtailed the powers of this Court, by taking away from it the granting of probates and letters of administration, which, except in certain specified cases, was conferred upon the Surrogates of the different Counties. The Constitution of 1821 provided for the election of officers to perform the duties of Surrogate in Counties having a population of more than forty thousand; and in keeping with this mandate of the Constitution the Legislature of 1823 abolished the Court of Probates altogether,* and granted its powers to the Surrogates of the different Counties, who were to be appointed by the Governour like other judicial officers.

The Revised Statutes† define the powers of the Surrogate as follows: Art. I., § 7, "When any real estate shall be devised by will, any executor or devisee named therein . . . may have such will proved before the Surrogate of the County to whom the probate of the will of the testator would belong"; and Art. II., § 23, says: "The Surrogate of each County shall have sole and exclusive power, within the County, for which he may have been appointed (or, as now, elected), to take proofs of last wills and testaments so far as the same relates to personal property of all deceased persons."

A law "for the more speedy recovery of legacies," passed by the General Assembly of the Province in 1743, authorized any person, entitled to a legacy under a will, to bring action against the executor or administrator, after it became due, etc., in the Supreme Court, and in this way, whatever powers were not conferred upon Surrogates, devolved upon the Supreme Court, until the Statutes were revised in 1829. The wills, marked as recorded in Volumes IV. and V., are proved in the Supreme Courts at Albany and Utica.

Although the Legislature ordered in 1799, that all wills, on file in the State Court of Probates, and relating to property in what was then called the Southern Senatorial District, should be transferred to New York City, that law, it will be seen, was only carelessly carried out, for this Calendar brings to light many wills of New York City, Westchester County, and Long Island.

In making these abstracts of wills the editor has been obliged to follow the arrangement of the files of wills in the office of the Clerk of the Court of Appeals, which is by the letters of the alphabet and chronological, but, as it will be seen, neither strictly alphabetical nor strictly chronological. To facilitate the finding of an original will the letter and number of each file is given with the date of execution and of proof.

The original spelling of names has been scrupulously adhered to, and whatever oddities and variations may be found in this regard are not the fault of
